

Taj Public Service Welfare Trust marks 17 years of service

The Taj Public Service Welfare Trust (TPSWT), established in December 2008 in the aftermath of the Mumbai terror attacks, marks 17 years of committed humanitarian service this year. Since its inception, the Trust has remained focused on supporting survivors and families affected by natural and man-made tragedies, as well as injured and differently abled members of the armed forces.

Reflecting on the milestone, Mr. Puneet Chhatwal, Managing Director & CEO, IHCL, said:

“For 17 years, the Taj Public Service Welfare Trust has extended unwavering support for relief and rehabilitation efforts nationwide. On this solemn day, we renew our commitment to serve with compassion and responsibility.”

He further added:

“Inspired by the resilience of those affected and the courage of those who stood by them, the Trust continues its mission to support impacted communities and help rebuild lives with dignity.”

Over the years, the Trust has implemented a wide spectrum of relief and rehabilitation programmes, including monthly financial assistance, pensions, medical aid, skill development initiatives, micro-enterprise grants and education support for children of affected families. During the COVID-19 pandemic, TPSWT played a crucial role by providing meals to migrant workers and frontline personnel, in addition to supplying medical equipment and essentials.

Through sustained interventions and compassionate outreach, the Taj Public Service Welfare Trust has positively impacted more than 5 million people across India.
