The Taj Public Service Welfare Trust (TPSWT), founded in December 2008 in the wake of the Mumbai terror attacks, commemorates 16 years of unwavering humanitarian efforts. Since its inception, the Trust has extended critical support to survivors and families affected by natural and man-made disasters, while also championing the welfare of injured and disabled armed forces personnel. During the COVID-19 pandemic, it played a pivotal role in aiding migrant workers and healthcare professionals.

Puneet Chhatwal, Managing Director & CEO of IHCL, reflected on the Trust's journey, saying, “For 16 years, the Trust has been committed to a wide array of relief and rehabilitation initiatives across the country. Today, we reaffirm our pledge to serve those in need.”

He further added, “Inspired by the resilience of those impacted and the courage of those who step forward to help, the Taj Public Service Welfare Trust continues its mission to empower affected individuals and communities to rebuild their lives with dignity.”

Focused on aiding individuals from marginalized financial and educational backgrounds, the Trust’s initiatives include providing monthly sustenance, pensions, skill development training, micro-enterprise grants, and educational allowances for children of affected families.
